

Jinx Fox

Like many children, I loved animals from an early age. I grew up in Asia, learning to ride on Indian Cavalry polo horses and keeping backyard ponies in India and Indonesia. Some of my earliest riding memories are of riding tough mountain ponies along steep cliffs in the Himalayan Mountains as well as riding through bazaars and neighborhoods in New Delhi and Djakarta.

My family moved to Fauquier County in the 1960s, where I rode many private hunt trails. I instructed riding at college and summer camps and, when my family moved overseas, I took my mare with me to Virginia Tech, where we explored miles of trails in the National Forest. Following several careers ranging from geology to wild horses & burros and park management, I now focus on my interests in horses, wildlife, art, and photography.

We have quite a few senior horses, including burro Jerome, on our Fauquier farm. My passions are trail riding, a bit of dressage, and learning new skills at clinics, as well as preserving our beautiful Fauquier countryside for conservation and trail riding.
